LEVEL 1 - 3 OF 3 STORIES

Copyright © 1983 The Washington Post

April 10, 1983, Sunday, Final Edition

SECTION: First Section; A1

LENGTH: 3198 words

HEADLINE: High Tech Gamble, High Stakes Loss

SERIES: The World Of IRIS; Part 1

BYLINE: By John de St. Jorre, Special to The Washington Post; John de St. Jorre, a former London Observer correspondent in Africa, Paris and the Middle East, became IRIS Africa director in March, 1982, after first turning down the job. He joined because he was attracted by the concept, the $75,000-a-year salary and the reassuring presence of other professional journalists. De St. Jorre supplemented his insider's knowledge by extensive interviews with the major figures involved in the story in the 10 months he worked for IRIS and the period after it collapsed.

KEYWORD: IRIS

BODY:

It sounded as if one of Walter Mitty's loftier flights of fancy had come true.
